

The Annedore-Leber Vocational Training Centre in Berlin

About us

The Annedore-Leber Vocational Training Centre in Berlin (ALBBW) has, over the last 30 years, had the task of giving comprehensive and individual training to young people with disabilities to prepare them for the vocational and social reality of life.

To achieve this aim, specially qualified training instructors work in close cooperation with their colleagues in the special rehabilitation service of the ALBBW (medical, psychological, social and special educational service) and the appropriate vocational college.

Courses on offer

The ALBBW currently offers over 500 participants the opportunity of vocational training in 33 professions in the areas of technology, services, as well as economics and administration. Training in the gastronomic courses takes place largely in the ALBBW's training hotel in Zeuthen.

In addition to this, the ALBBW offers rehabilitation-orientated vocational preparation, work trials and job-seeking services.

The vocational college tuition takes place in the Annedore-Leber High School within the same establishment.

The rehabilitation and cost provider is generally the Federal Employment Agency.

Training cooperation

A focal point of the ALBBW is the successful cooperation with companies in Berlin and Brandenburg in the training of young people with disabilities. The aim is to provide the very best professional qualification which enables young disabled people to enter working life and to become integrated in the long term into the labour market.

Learning and living in a residential school

Living in the residential school ensures a holistic care support and rehabilitation.

The aims of the fostering support in the residential school are: an independent lifestyle for the young people in rehabilitation, support in achieving successful completion of the training and, finally, the transfer and integration into professional life.

Advisory Service for Vocational Integration

The advisory service for integration into a profession coordinates the vocational assimilation into the working environment. For companies, if required there is a comprehensive advisory service and accompaniment during the assimilation process. An individually distinctive profiling ensures that the transfer and integration is always perfectly tailored; the advisory service is also the contact point for companies during the initial induction phase.
